

Supriya Dwivedi is fluently trilingual in English, French and Hindi, so that means she can give you her (unsolicited) opinion in all three languages. Supriya graduated with a Bachelor of Science from McGill University, and upon completion she was accepted into both medical and law school. Much to the chagrin of her grandmother, Supriya opted to pursue the legal route at the Université de Montréal so she could finally use her argumentative powers for good.

Once equipped with both an LL.B. and a J.D., Supriya moved to Toronto and went on to work in the dark arts of government relations, dabbling in political strategy on the side.

When Supriya realized she could make a living by talking for hours on end, she made the move to host The Morning Show on Global News Radio 640 Toronto, and although that means waking up at an ungodly hour everyday she wouldn't have it any other way.
